

GUIDE TO AUTHORS

Articles for Alberta History normally range between 3,000 and 5,000 words, including endnotes. This is approximately 10 to 17 pages, double spaced on 8 ½ x 11 inch paper.

Articles should deal specifically with topics on Alberta history, or Territorial history where there is a regional relevance.

Articles may be sent on speculation, or an outline submitted. Only one copy is required. Rejected articles are returned. Academic papers are juried.

Endnotes must be typed separately at the end of the paper. Bibliographies are not used so all data should be in the endnotes. Subheadings and tables are discouraged. We do not use products of "creative writing" but emphasize purely factual articles.

No payment is made for articles. Authors receive up to 10 complimentary copies of the issue and can receive a discount on further copies.

The editor reserves the right to edit articles to meet Alberta History standards and style, as well as for making corrections, or for improving readability. Authors will receive proofs.

If an article is accepted for publication, the author should submit the following: a two or three sentence biography; sources of photographs or graphics; and a disk of the paper.

As the position of editor is not a full time one, there may be delays in replying to submissions. However, we try to accept or reject a paper within 2 months and publish within a year.

The Society maintains copyright in authors' articles for onetime use only, after which the rights revert to the authors. However, the Society reserves the right to have the article digitized as it appears in Alberta History or reprint it in a future publication.
